This program is an alternate perspective into how "esthetics-driven" implant dentistry has evolved, and why in 2012 it is essential to combine both the "pink" and "white" aspects to achieve that optimal cosmetic result.

This complete philosophical approach involves both a biologic understanding of the healing process, as well as a need for very specific implant and abutment designs. Today, understanding the "limitations" of what is feasible from a surgical and biological perspective is of paramount importance, as these limitations often require use of different surgical approaches and a new modus operandi incorporating gingival colored "pink" restoratives. 3D CAD/CAM treatment planning has become a key factor for consummate implant esthetics, so that preemptive planning of soft and hard tissue grafts, implant placement, ridge reduction and restorative design now utilize definitively specific protocols for these types of procedures/or prosthetic gingival restorations.

This program will address:

- Virtual treatment planning for gingival outcomes—3-dimensional planning of implants and hard and soft tissue grafts using computer simulation.
- Surgical augmentation—What to use and when to use it.
- New protocols for dento-gingival provisional restorations.
- Artificial gingivae—ceramic versus composite.
- Gingival and osseous reduction to optimize esthetics.
- Hygiene and maintenance beyond esthetics over the long-term.
- Key factors in selecting an implant system.
- New considerations in abutment design.
- The abutment/implant interface in esthetics.
- Zirconium/titanium or ceramo-metal abutment.
- Limitations of individual techniques.
- The adjacent implant dilemma.
- Submerged Root Alternative.
